What are the main agreements (MoU) signed by the BFC? And why?

Recently, the BFC has signed 2 MoU with similar organizations active in the promotion of the financial markets in their countries: Casablanca Finance City (CFC) and Rwanda Finance (RF). All three organizations are members of the World Alliance of International Financial Centers (WAIFC).

The BFC chose to work more closely with these two associations for several reasons: both are based in Africa, a continent close to Europe and with numerous airline connections with Brussels, both are leading regional financial centers, and both have privileged links with Belgium for historical reasons: a number of Belgian residents have a Moroccan or Rwandese origin.

What is the strategy of the BFC in the next years?

In the coming years, we plan to cooperate on several specific projects. We have been in discussion with Casablanca to organize a conference on green hydrogen given the attraction of this new form of energy in Belgium and the development of solar energy in Morocco.

Concerning Rwanda, the BFC is in contact with a crowdfunding platform active on a project allowing Belgian residents to invest in Rwandese SMEs. Recently, in early December, Peter De Proft, vice-chairman of the BFC, took part in a panel discussion organized for the Annual Review of Kigali International Financial Center. The theme was “The State of Play of International Financial Centers: Collaboration or Competition?” The participants shared the conclusion of the importance of cooperation. Other initiatives will certainly take place in the future.
Opinion of Thomas Krantz on the Global City: Introducing a Concept

“Some ancient cities and several very new ones have understood that a certain kind of urban sociology is essential for promoting the financial services of the 2020s. That seems obvious today. But if one considers the far greater number of other cities around the world with rich cultural histories that have not orchestrated what it takes to be a financial center, then one realizes that simply being an urban center is far from being enough to qualify as a global city.”
