We are fully engaged and committed to relaying the government’s recommendations within our business community.

It is worth mentioning that Morocco was one of the first African countries to implement strict sanitary measures at an early stage. These included immediate quarantine, the closing of country borders, and restraining intercity travel. In addition, the country has put in place an efficient process for vaccination, where citizens can send a quick text message to an automated number and instantly receive a location and date for their vaccine.

At the CFC level specifically, we asked our business community to take all the necessary steps in keeping safe and helping to prevent the virus from spreading. We encouraged remote working for those able to, published guidelines, and implemented very strict sanitary measures at the CFC First tower. Last, CFC has put in place a digital platform for its members to inform them on the trends and evolution of COVID-19 in Africa. The platform shared updated statistics, analysis, and insights on the evolution of the pandemic in Morocco and beyond in Africa.

How is CFC contributing to the economic recovery?

Moroccan authorities have been proactive in managing the crisis and implementing measures to foster the post-COVID economic recovery while building back better:

- A special fund with an initial $1 billion was created to collect private and public funding to strengthen the health system and finance special allocations and safety nets especially for the underprivileged. Thanks to a national solidarity movement the fund has reached $3Bn.

• A high-level economic watch committee was also in place to monitor and manage the economic consequences of the pandemic. It announced a temporary suspension of all legal and regulatory deadlines, bank loan repayments and leasing as well as social charges for companies.

• The central bank activated additional credit lines to facilitate inter-banking liquidity for SMEs and a new guarantee mechanism will cover 95% of the loans of companies facing difficulties.

On our side, CFC launched a survey, which aimed to assess the impact of COVID-19 on the activity of the CFC companies. The survey shed light on the challenges facing the members of our community and fueled the discussion on how to address these limitations and bottlenecks. This survey led to the creation of a dedicated task force amongst CFC members on “Post-COVID recovery”. Key takeaways were that the current situation was a challenging time for most companies, but also that the COVID-19 crisis acted as a silver lining and accelerated trends such as digital transformation, remote work, and e-commerce.

In addition, during these unprecedented times, the CFC community came together in solidarity to collect data, on the situation in African countries where our companies operate concerning topics, such as HR/labor law practices. A special “CFC Africa Insights” report was published as a result of this data collection, detailing the African labor and employment overview during COVID-19.

We are convinced that in each crisis lies tremendous opportunities and that CFC members can leverage these opportunities to build back better and contribute to more sustainable, resilient, and inclusive growth trajectories in our continent.

Interview with Zahra Abdel Rassoul, WAIFC Board member, and Deputy CEO of Stuttgart Financial Stuttgart Financial Center’s new report is out. What is the main goal of this very interesting publication?

We are very proud to share a publication with the news of our sustainability strategy at the Financial Center Stuttgart Financial, located in Baden-Wuerttemberg (BW), Germany.

With the aim of Europe to become the first climate-neutral continent by 2050, a clear statement towards the financial service industry has been made: the financial service industry shall support the industry’s transformation towards a circular economy by providing and shifting capital to more climate-friendly activities. The transformation creates new markets and business models but also new opportunities and risks. Therefore, the financial service industry plays a vital part in the transformation towards a sustainable society. For financial centers, it means that the ecosystem as a whole has to get reconsidered.

With the diversity of its players, Stuttgart Financial is an innovation driver for business, science, and education in Baden-Württemberg. Now, this long-term sustainability strategy shall underline our commitment to the increasing importance of sustainability and our contribution to advance sustainable finance in particular.
As the Financial Center initiative, our main goal was to shape a common consensus and vision between the different types and sizes of financial institutions that are based in Stuttgart and BW. Additionally, we want to increase the interfaces between the financial industry, economy, the state, and our scientific institutions. Therefore, the report is a perfect reflection of cooperative work, connecting the financial center, best practice exchange, and joint action to increase sustainable activities.

How will Stuttgart Financial Center and market players make a positive contribution to climate protection?

The new sustainability strategy takes up reference points at the state, federal and international levels and the European Union's requirements into account. With Baden-Wuerttemberg being the only green-party lead state in Germany, we see great potential in future developments and cooperation.

The concrete activities at Stuttgart Financial will be based on the recommended five fields of action of the "Financial Centers for Sustainability" (FC4S) initiative of the United Nations. These include strengthening strategic commitment by reducing the carbon footprint following science-based climate targets. Also, involves strengthening market integrity through continuing education programs and cooperation with universities. Capacity building on the topic of sustainability, innovation promotion, and support for the real economy is also addressed in the projects.

Therefore, our activities will advance the level of sustainable finance and lead to more climate-friendly processes and business.

What are the main targets of Stuttgart Financial for the upcoming years?

For the upcoming years, we would like to develop into one of the leading financial centers for sustainability and sustainable finance in Germany and Europe. The primary objective is to realize more sustainable projects together and to support the companies within their sustainable development.

Therefore, we plan to increase our activities and enable more joint projects to realize synergies at the financial center. Currently, more than 20 institutions are involved in developing the matter of sustainable finance. Further, we seek to increase awareness and sensibility for this topic within the overall public and local institutions. For example, we started educative measures for different target groups and sectors. We experienced that there is still high demand for education about the chances and risks of sustainability.

A frequent roundtable shall enable exchange about matters as the internal footprint of the institutions. Last but not least, due to the European Green Deal, there are many regulatory challenges upcoming, where we want to support our financial institutions and increase the best practice sharing to support our large SME sector.

Opinion of Thomas Krantz on the Coalescing of ESG / Sustainability Standards

International Financial Centers can expect a progressive coalescing of the actors in their marketplaces around either the Value Reporting Foundation or the Global Reporting Initiative.

Having two major, credible methodologies for preparing ESG / sustainability information is bound to help businesses define their strategies and achieve more success. There will be greater comparability in preparing these reports, and therefore more transparency.
