Yernur Rysmagambetov shared an important message during the WAIFC Annual General Meeting in Dubai.

Interview with Yernur Rysmagambetov, CEO of Astana International Financial Centre (AIFC)

Which is your balance about Astana International Financial Centre’s participation in WAIFC’s Annual General Meeting?

We are very happy to be a part of WAIFC. It has been since the beginning we have been supporting the initiative.

For this specific Annual General Meeting, we think it was very positive the fact we could meet the members face-to-face again. As the majority of the world, at AIFC, our work even stopped during the Pandemic times. But then we rapidly adapted to remote-work format and continued mostly online and now we are excited to have this face-to-face Event.

For AIFC, it was very important to meet with all the different Financial Centers in the post-pandemic era. All the WAIFC members have their own challenges in home countries, and this kind of Meeting is very important to share experiences, ideas, solutions, new trends, and in general, challenges and opportunities about the ongoing future.

We had a two-day session where we discussed mostly about the past challenges. Then we also discussed about the future of finance, and those discussions were very relevant to fine-tune our strategy with other leading Financial Centers around the globe.

We also think that AIFC capitalized on the AGM opportunity to explain how AIFC adds value to the community of Kazakhstan. Like happened this year, in 2022 we’re going to have a Forum as an appointment to continue our brainstorming sessions around the future of finance and innovative products and services that will help our markets in post-crisis recovery.
